GEORGIA'S ELEVEN LAW "BARBARISM"

of Southern States National Child Labor Speaks at World's Citizenship Meet

WASHINGTON, July 1.—The cotton industry of four southern states and the Carolina legislature have been prevented from passing laws which would have restricted child labor in mills, in an address by A. J. McKelway of Washington, D. C., secretary for the southern branch of the national child labor league.

WICKELWAY, who is a member of the Georgia legislature, said that the Georgia legislature has passed laws which would have restricted child labor in mills, in an address by A. J. McKelway of Washington, D. C., secretary for the southern branch of the national child labor league.
