LEADING COUNSEL FOR FRANK IN FULL SWING

Rosser's work on the Frank case has taxed even his remarkable physique. He has lost 25 pounds in weight.

Bankers Plok Flaws in New Money Bill

CHICAGO, Aug. 21.—A. B. Hepburn, of the Chase National Bank, New York, was the chief speaker to-day at a meeting of bankers and clearing house association representatives from all parts of the country.

CLOSING ARGUMENTS MAY TAKE ENTIRE DAY; DORSEY TO END CASE

Quickly but impressively, Luther Z. Rosser began the final plea in the defense of Leo M. Frank, accused of the murder of Mary Phagan, Friday morning.

He spoke without heat in the introduction of his speech. He said that but for his profound conviction that his client was innocent he would not speak at all because the evidence spoke for itself.

Rosser was expected to speak for several hours and will be followed by Hollister Dorsey, who may finish before evening. It seemed probable, however, that the final arguments would take up the entire day and the judge make his charge to-morrow morning.

"Gentlemen of the jury," he began in a low voice, as he leaned against the railing of the jury box. "All things come to an end. With the end of this case it was almost the end of the trial. But for the mastery effort of my friend Arnold I am almost with it.

He had not the faintest idea of the attitude of the juror's mind as he carefully walks the streets. My friend Hooper must have brought that doctrine with him when he came to Atlanta.

He asserted that the Solicitor had been forced to warp and stretch the law in order to bring about the situation in which it would have been possible for Frank to have committed the crime and gone through the disposal of Mary Phagan's body as arranged by his own witnesses.

Luther Z. Rosser closes arguments for defense.

Rosser possesses none of the graces of the pleasing speaker, but in forcefulness he is hardly surpassed at the Atlanta bar.

Thaw sat in the St. Francis jail here bombarding various official circles in the United States to come to his aid.

Having won a big victory in getting arguments on his habeas corpus writ postponed until next week, Thaw was in a hopeful frame of mind, and said that he thought either the United States Government or the government of Pennsylvania eventually would come to his aid.

All interest in Thaw, who has been completely overshadowed by the interest attached to Thaw's case.

"I believe that Thaw will be liberated and granted full rights as a citizen," declared Thompson, "in that case, how could I be held for compensation for me in fact, I am tempted to become a resident of this country if I can establish my civic rights here."

"Thaw has taken additional hope from an editorial in The Sherbrooke Record demanding 'British fair play' for him."

"That is the proper spirit," said Thaw delightedly, when shown a copy of the paper, "I know I will get fair play here, and that is something I never got in New York. Never was mortal man treated worse than I was. They conspired against me to keep me in an asylum which was worse than being in prison. I know that the people of Canada have only kind feelings for me in fact, I am tempted to become a resident of this country if I can establish my civic rights here."

"Thaw dealt out cigars by the handful to the reporters for The Record, who showed him the paper."

"Not Thinking of Suicide." "Do you think I am going to batter my way through those thick walls?" demanded the prisoner, of Governor H. La Force, of the Penitentiary.

"They are also mistaken if they think I am going to harm myself. Do people think I would be fighting so hard for my full freedom if I was thinking of suicide?"

Colonel H. B. Fraser, C. D., White, J. W. McKee, N. K. La Plante and J. N. Greenblatt, all lawyers for Thaw, said that they would hold a consultation some time to-day and discuss the case from every angle.

There is a dangerous crossing as a result of new grading, and to add to the difficulty, Mr. Price's machine suddenly went "dead," and "dead" it remained until nearly midnight.

While the celebration in Birmingham and the "send off" in Atlanta last Monday were the biggest things on the program thus far, they in comparison were no less enthusiastic than the ovations accorded all along the route between the two Southern cities.

FRANK TRIAL HEARING END; CASE NOW KEELY TO REACH JURY TO-DAY

Continued from Page 1. conviction that the man who wrote the names found by body of Mary Phagan was her murderer. He brand-ed Jim Conley as a miserable, lying scoundrel who was mostly engaged in concocting stories, with the help of the detectives, with which he might save his own black neck from hanging on the gallows. The crime, he said, was the work of a savage negro. The eloquent lawyer paid his compliments to "Christopher Columbus" Barrett, the "discoverer" of the alleged blood spots and of the strands of hair on the fabric machine. He charged that Barrett was only after the reward money, and called to the attention of the jury that Chief Detectives Lanford and his sleuths went over the same place on the factory floor Sunday where Barrett discovered the spots on Monday morning. "He further called their attention to the fact that four chips were taken up by the detectives in the place where the supposed blood spots were found and that of only one of these were any blood corpuscles found—and then only three or four, when one drop of blood contains thousands of the corpuscles. He referred to the testimony and showed that the chips were covered with grime and dirt, and that there was nothing to show that the few blood corpuscles had not been there months or years. The people, inasmuch as they failed to respond to the blood test, he maintained, must have resulted from scum on the eyes, exactly as the defendant had confessed from the very first. C. B. Dalton, who was one of the spectators in the room, since Mr. "Christopher Columbus" Barrett, heard himself described by the attorney as a "common liar" and has again his changing and court record. Says Detectives Coached Negro.

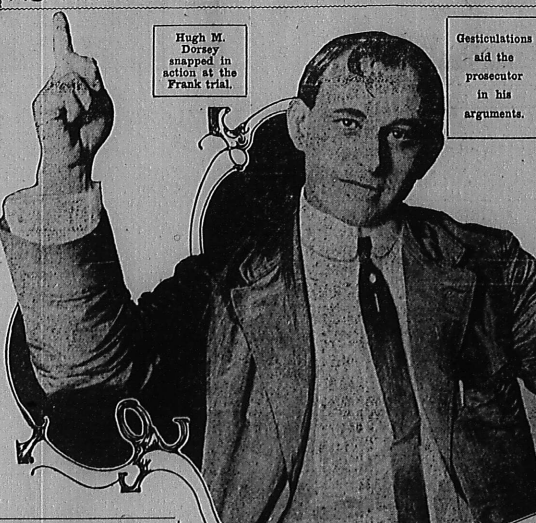

Frank then turned his attention to the negro Conley's story, as told in his various affidavits and on the stand. He took it from the first and pointed out what he deemed the inconsistencies and the impossibilities. He pictured the detective helping the negro in his story. He exhibited a chart and pointed out the time discrepancy in the State's case from the viewpoint of the defense tomorrow in the City Court of Washington, the writ having been sworn out by W. L. Hamilton against Mrs. Minerva Mitchell Hamilton, of Monroe. Hamilton's father-in-law, swore out a warrant against Hamilton charging "wife beating." He was arrested and brought to Washington, being released on bond. A counter move, Hamilton instituted proceedings for contempt charging Mrs. Hamilton with being "high strung," unwilling to "do the part of a poor man's wife without a fuss."

At Anniston, where the party stopped Tuesday night, interest was so keen between rival delegations from Riverside and Ashville that Mr. Ferguson had some difficulty in selecting the route. Friends of Pierre Minier, child deputy under the present Sheriff, have been urging him to run, and it is said he has consented to become a candidate. HOOPER AND DORSEY IN ARGUMENT AND THE MOST OF THEIR OPPOSITIONS

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

Frank Hooper's speech in behalf of the prosecution against Leo Frank charged with the murder of Mary Phagan, reflected much credit upon him.

It was fair to the point, well thought out and appealing in tone and delivery.

I went for the defendant, hammer and tongs, but it was devoid of anything that might be construed as below the belt.

Undoubtedly, it was not pleasant to the defendant, sitting there, stolidly following the words of Hooper, but Dorsey and Hooper, in his final appeal, made out a most dangerous case against Frank, and Hooper was there to explain and sustain it. He performed his duty in a way that hardly can fail to bring him lasting applause and commendation.

If, however, Frank felt to the full the gloom of the case made out against him by Hooper, he was more than abundantly taken care of when Arnold followed.

The case made out in defense of Frank by Arnold was extremely plain—almost covered in detail by the development by Hooper. It, like Hooper's, was a speech evidently carefully considered and well prepared.

Jury Held in High Esteem. Now, the things about these two cases that make them so interesting and uniquely noteworthy, perhaps, is that both were seemingly designed for the consideration of a jury. They were highly intelligent and not apt to rush pell-mell to a verdict either for or against Frank.

And if the opposing counsel entertain that opinion of the jury—if they hold it in such compelling esteem and respect—and if the jury is such a jury as deserves that opinion, which I think it is, then the chances are that its verdict will be righteous and just whatever it may be.

And that the finding of this jury holds the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth—that, in the words of Hamlet, "tis a whited"!

"Try this case, gentlemen, according to the law and the facts," said Frank Hooper, addressing the jury Thursday.

That is the final and the ultimate request any man for or against the defendant could or should make of a jury beyond the primary outlining of the two main points of view.

And so, while Hooper and Dorsey may go further than Hooper and Arnold in invective, sarcasm, ridicule and passionate outbreak, neither is apt to add anything material to either side, as compared with the things Hooper and Arnold have said.

There is some advantage to the Hooper or at least, there is supposed to be some advantage to it—in that it has the concluding argument before the jury.

No Injustice There. Some people think this is an injustice and a hardship upon the defense, but when one comes to consider the theory upon which that practice is founded the apparent injustice and hardship of it vanishes, and it may be seen readily enough that in this, as in so many things, the law has JURY think, and what will the jury say?

No one of us has the opportunity to know so well the ins and outs of the case as the jury. They just don't read what I write nor do they hear what you say. It is there in the courtroom, aside from the outside world, of justice, to the State and to Frank, though the heavens fall.

There is no responsibility upon its individuals expressing opinion pro and con. They are not under oath—the life of a human being, on the one hand, and the majesty of the law of the land on the other, are no direct legal concerns of theirs.

It is all very well for you to say, "It's time for argument has passed, Hooper and Arnold and Hooper and Dorsey have concluded that," whatever their verdict may be, but the law-abiding public will prepare itself to receive the verdict as the final and determining circumstance that means something definite in law.

With a jurymen, however, the case is different—he is there to fashion a finding that means everything!

Within twenty-four hours, perhaps, the public will know what the jurymen think of the case made against him. The jury may convict him, and it may acquit him.

No man possibly can know at this time—and nothing is so uncertain in the matter of forecasting as the verdict of a jury.

Public Should Accept Verdict. But whether it be acquittal or conviction, the public should, and the law-abiding public will, prepare itself to accept that verdict as righteous and just.

No man ought to be willing to set his opinion doggedly against that of those "twelve good men and true," whatever their verdict may be. Leo Frank, the defendant, is entitled to all the protection the law affords him—he is entitled to an absolutely fair trial, without favor or prejudice, one way or the other, he is entitled to all of that—but no more.

State Has Rights as Sacred as the defendant's—they must be considered. What more can human iniquity do? He is entitled to the truth of the case like any other man, and he is entitled to the truth of the case like any other man.

CANADIAN PRESS FOR RELEASING HARRIS THAW

Sympathy for Fugitive Great, and He is Elated as Court Delay Aids His Flight.

Thaw will never go back to Maitland, said Colonel Fraser.

The officials of the Department of Immigration are marking their time and doing nothing. There was apparently nothing for them to do with Thaw in jail and his custody entirely in the hands of the court. If the court turns Thaw loose or holds that he can be extradited, he will be turned over to the immigration Department officials at once.

These are the various lines along which Thaw now is fighting: Delaying arguments on his habeas corpus fight, that he will not be kept in jail and not fall into the hands of the immigration Department.

Having his sanity established by Canadian specialists in order to prove to the Government he is not an undesirable.

Appealing to the American State Department and the Governor of Pennsylvania to assist him as a resident of the United States and property holder in Pennsylvania.

Preparing to ask for an injunction to prevent extradition of deportation if turned over to the officials of the immigration Department by the court.

Bill Cleave, He Yells Mather, securing the court permission to get his temporary freedom on bail, or that he might leave the country and return.

Retest the service of the Dutchess County, N. Y. warrant charging him with the conspiracy in his escape from Maitland.

Thaw to-day wrote a long letter to his mother, in which he expressed his hope soon to meet her in Cresco, Pa.

"My cleverness is not exhausted yet," he told her.

"When the prisoner looked through the barred window of his cell and saw a crowd of several hundred people in the streets about the jail, he showed his elation. The people of the city were still making a gala occasion of Thaw's enforced stay here. There are so many visiting lawyers, newspaper men and editors that hotel accommodations are becoming scarce.

"Oh, Central, please get off the line, we're trying to get married," Mrs. Central answered.

Moziel and Miss Igon had found two magistrates absent from their offices, and when they reached the office of Koehn, only to find him gone, they located him at a construction, three miles from the city, and he readily consented to "tie the knot" by phone.

no sorry for him I couldn't keep from cuddling him.

The hotel attaches tell a rather remarkable tale about the coming of the cat, which shows why he was named "Governor Slaton." It seems that when the rugs came to the Ansley and workmen took to the thirteenth floor, a big white cat jumped out when they unrolled one. Kitty ran down the hall, and no attention was paid to her. Two weeks later the hotel opened, and Governor John M. Slaton was the first man to register. The same night one of the hotel employees found a little white cat on the thirteenth floor, crying its little heart out for something to eat. By consulting a few clocks and watches, it was learned that the cat had been born at the exact moment Governor Slaton was registering his name on the hotel register—hence the name.

Get Off the Line! We're Being Married!

DAYTON, OHIO, Aug. 22.—"Do you, Louis Moziel—" "Number, please," "take Florence Igon—" "Central, please get off the line, we're trying to get married," Mrs. Central answered.

Moziel and Miss Igon had found two magistrates absent from their offices, and when they reached the office of Koehn, only to find him gone, they located him at a construction, three miles from the city, and he readily consented to "tie the knot" by phone.

no sorry for him I couldn't keep from cuddling him.

The hotel attaches tell a rather remarkable tale about the coming of the cat, which shows why he was named "Governor Slaton." CANADIAN WILL TRY SANITY OF THAW

Dominion Government Shows
Hand for First Time in Legal Battle Over Fugitive.

SHERBROOKE, QUEBEC, Aug. 22.—The Canadian Government to-day showed its hand in the case of Harry M. Thaw, the fugitive from Montreal, who is held here in jail.

F. Campbell, counsel for the Dominion Government, secured a postponement of one week of the hearing of "Educated Roger" Thompson, the New York City chairman, who is under arrest charged with aiding and abetting an undesirable alien to enter the country.

At the same time W. L. Shurtleff, of counsel for Thaw, returned from Ottawa after setting on foot the Department of Immigration that it must show that Thaw is insane before he can be deported or extradited.

Blake Robertson, assistant superintendent of the Department of Immigration, is here and is holding several consultations with local physicians. It is reported that alienists will be brought from Ottawa and Montreal to examine Thaw for the Government.

The indications now are that the Government will attempt to prove Thaw insane. That would be acceptable to the Thaw counsel, as they have already taken steps to combat it under direction of Dr. Britton Evans.

Plan to Show Thaw Insane.
The Government has sent to New York for papers by which it is planned to show that Thaw is insane.

Thaw has issued an appeal to the public.

"Do not see me persecuted," he cried from his cell.

In securing the postponement of the hearing, Mr. Campbell said:

"From the moment of this man's arrest we have been awaiting certain papers from New York. They are important. They bear on the mental condition and the Government cannot go on without them."

Thaw met to-day in the St. Francis jail bombarding various official circles in the United States demanding that they come to his aid. Thaw is a plot to liberate Thaw from thick and fast, but no foundation for them could be found.

Plot Rumors Still Governor.
As the result of rumors of a plot to take Thaw from jail the prisoner was isolated. Governor LaForce ordered that no one but Thaw's accredited attorneys should visit him in the future. Hereafter newspaper men had been given great freedom about the jail.

Governor LaForce suddenly has become suspicious of strangers. He once suspected Dr. Evans, the famous alienist, of being a "fugitive." Thaw's lawyers scoff at the idea of a plot.

Rumors of the plot appear to have arisen from a chance remark at the courthouse. A spectator expressed the belief that if Thaw was taken from the jail in an automobile the driver could be bribed to clean out of town with Thaw in the car. In the crowd Thaw's disappearance might not be noticed. He would be taken to his good his getaway. One British correspondent overheard this talk, and accepted it as an authentic piece of information, used it.

From this humble beginning the report grew until it was widespread from person to person that a band of gangsters had been imported from New York and that everything was ready for a coup. Many remained near the jail all night so as not to miss the spectacle.

Editorial Pleases Thaw.
Dr. Evans has left for New York. He was much amused at being asked for a gangster. His appearance before some extent the suspicion of the jailer and the attempt to make a burly man with a red face.

Thaw has taken additional hope from an editorial in The Rhinebeck Record demanding "British fair play" for him.

That is the proper spirit," said Superintendent Page T. Clum.

L. Hamilton against Mrs. Minerva Mitchell Hamilton, of Monroe, Ga.

A. T. Mitchell, of Monroe, Hamilton's father-in-law, swore out a warrant against Hamilton charging "wife beating." He was arrested and brought to Washington, being released on bond.

As a counter move, Hamilton instituted proceedings for divorce, charging Mrs. Hamilton with being "high strung," unwilling to "do the part of a poor man's wife without a man."

LEADING COUNSEL FOR FRANK IN FULL SWING

Rosser works on the case has taxed even his remarkable physique. He has lost 25 pounds in weight.

ROSSER A "WIREGRASS" MAN, TOO—HOOPER

During his argument Attorney Rosser referred to Attorney Hooper as "the wiregrass," and "my friend from the wiregrass."

Not long after the jury was excused for a breathing spell, Hooper came over to the press table and made an attempt to make an examination of where his case from that of Mrs. Hooper's numerous references to him.

"We both came from Randolph County," Hooper said, "and I guess Mrs. Rosser knows about as much about posters and wiregrass as I do."

Luther Z. Rosser closes argument for defense.

SOLICITOR AND CITY DETECTIVES SCORED. FOR TACTICS IN CASE

For three and one-half hours Friday Luther Rosser, making the final plea of the defense, held the State's case against Leo M. Frank, charged with the murder of Mary Phagan, up to the scorn of an intently listening jury in a masterful, analytical and denunciatory closing argument. It was one of the most striking speeches of its kind ever heard in a Georgia court. For the most part Mr. Rosser was cool and incisive, but at times he grew bitter in his attack on the methods he attributed to Solicitor Dorsey and the detectives.

Jim Conley he discussed with unparrying epithets. He declared that it was a shame to the city and State that the word of "a filthy, criminal, lying negro" should be taken in an effort to hang a man, and that the State would regret it for many a day.

He analyzed all the so-called suspicious circumstances held against Frank, and asserted that only distorted minds made these circumstances "suspicious."

Has Courtroom on Verge of Tears.
In a moving description of the death of Mary Phagan and the picture her body made as it lay in the morgue, Mr. Rosser had many in the courtroom on the verge of tears, but the "moff" of his talk was not pathos but ridicule, denunciation and calm analysis. When the noon recess was taken Rosser had just launched into his attack on Conley, and at the afternoon session was expected to pick the negro's story to pieces.

Solicitor Dorsey will follow with an exhaustive arraignment of Frank, a general denial of the charges that "prejudice" has figured in the case and a review of every damning circumstance against the prisoner. It seemed likely that he will not finish his argument Friday, and the case will probably not go to the jury before Saturday morning.

Rosser's Speech Remarkably Calm.
Rosser's speech was remarkable for its calmness, but its very quietness added to its impressiveness. For the most part he sought to impress upon the jury that "fair play" must be done, and that they were a sacred body set apart to weigh facts and do justice unimpaired by outside consideration.

However, the speaker was unparrying in discussing Jim Conley, O. B. Dalton and the methods used by the detectives to get evidence that he held up to ridicule. When he had been talking for two hours he launched into an indirect but bitter arraignment of Solicitor Dorsey, referring particularly to the attempt to make Frank's hiring of Rosser look like a damning circumstance.

Calls Dorsey's Insinuations Contemptible.
"My friend Dorsey," he said, "made much of the fact that Frank hired the lawyer. The charges and insinuations that he has made are the most contemptible that have ever occurred in a Georgia court. The things he has done in this trial will never be done in Georgia again. I will make my life on that."

"You may question Frank in his judgment; he might have hired a better lawyer than I. He might have hired a more decent lawyer, but he couldn't have hired a more devoted lawyer. I will say that for myself if I drop dead in my tracks."

"Gentlemen of the jury," he began in a low voice, as he leaned against the railing of the jury box. "All things come to an end. With the end of this case it was almost the end of the trial. But for that masterly effort of my friend Arnold I almost wish it had ended without any speaking. My physical condition enables me to say but little. My voice is husky and almost useless. But for my intense interest, my profound conviction of the innocence of this man, I would say nothing. Public Mind Always Careless.

"I want to repeat what my friend Arnold has said. This jury is no mob. The attitude of the man who carelessly walks by the street, my friend Hooper must have thought that when he came to Atlanta.

"We walk the streets carelessly, absorbed in our own interests. We

Another Rosser's Tribute to the Jury

"We walk the streets carelessly, absorbed in our own interests. We pass our friends, and do not recognize them. The mind wanders in flights of fancy and fits of revelry. We mean no harm to ourselves nor harm to our friends, but we are careless. When on the street, you are set aside. You cease to be a part of that revelry of the street. In old pagan Rome women walked the streets, chatted gaily and carelessly, but a few were set aside—the vestal virgins. They cared not for the gladiatorial combats or the strife.

not the testimony. Rosser said: "New! Lee did. I got it out of one of the boys on the stand. 'No, he didn't,' replied Rosser. 'He said it looked like a shirt of gold.' 'Well, will admit it,' Rosser continued; 'we will just put it that way. We will suppose they went out and got a body shirt just like the one old New Lee wore and hid it in that barrel.' "Frank didn't even know where old man Lee lived. He certainly didn't know he had a shirt that looked like that, and I never heard of going to the extremes to try to hang an innocent man."

"That old man Lee—I don't believe he had anything to do with the crime itself. I never believed anything but that he found a corpse in the street and hid it. I don't understand how he knew it was white when it took the detectives so long to find the crime scene. I don't understand how he knew it was white when the body from where the detectives themselves said it was impossible to see."

"And he said the face was turned up and the police found it different from the body of the man. 'New! Lee was a white girl, but I still don't believe he had anything to do with the crime. I don't believe he was the most remarkable old negro that ever lived.' "Shame the Way They Treated New Lee."

"If I had his endurance, I would talk forever. It will be a shame to the dying day of every member of that detective department who treated the poor old man as they did. I don't know how they talked to him until he got weary and his head hung low, and then they took a fresh relay, and when it looked like he couldn't endure it any longer, they would come in with a battery of pistols and poke them in his face."

"I am afraid New Lee saw the body before he said he hid it. But he is a wonderful negro. Oh, the dirty trick that you played on him will be remembered for a long time. temptible, a piece of work as was ever done. They showed that dirty work and his dirty heart and dirty eyes who was responsible for it. I'll call his name. "I've had that joke played on me nearly, once before. Some railroad lawyer dressed up a brakeman who was raising the railroad and brought him into court, but I never heard of it being done in a case of life and death."

"It is very hard to find a man that somebody would believe. There's Dalton; some few believe him. But who was there, in all that crowd, who knew that Frank in any way wrong conduct. Dalton merely said that he had seen Frank in Frank's office. When questioned, he was unable to say that he ever saw Frank do a wrong act."

"That Conley says that it was Frank who had Daltry Hopkins. This is the important point on which these two men differ. Conley said that Daltry Hopkins was with some 'peach,' some lesser beauty, living between Haines and the street door."

"Do you, Starnes? Stand up if you do." "Do you, Black? Stand up." "Do you, Campbell?" "Do you, Rosser? Rise and be sworn in the fact of the matter, you know Frank was in the same place as Moser, and I know he would have a suck-egg on the testimony of the lying nigger Conley."

"If they were swept away back all the way to get me, I would stand up and say that he was an honest negro. But they found not a soul. Who is there that will stand up and marry the nigger Conley to the truth? Not a person. Failed to Prove Frank a Pervert."

Hugh M. Dorsey snapped in action at the Frank trial. Gesticulations aid the prosecutor in his arguments.

With the fate of Leo M. Frank, accused of the murder of Mary Phagan, soon to be put in the hands of the jury, Luther Z. Rosser Friday made an extraordinary closing argument for the defense in a final effort to convince the jury of the entire innocence of his client.

Rosser's speech was remarkable for its calmness, but its very quietness added to its impressiveness. For the most part he sought to impress upon the jury that "fair play" must be done, and that they were a sacred body set apart to weigh facts and do justice unflinching by outside consideration.

However, the speaker was unimpaired in discussing Jim Conroy, O. B. Dalton and the methods used by the detectives to get evidence that he had up to ridicule. When he had been talking for two hours he launched into an indirect but bitter arraignment of Solicitor Dorsey, referring particularly to the attempt to make Frank's hiring of Rosser look like a damning circumstance.

"My friend Dorsey," he said, "made much of the fact that Frank hired the lawyer. The charges and insinuations that he has made are the most contemptible that have ever occurred in Georgia court. The things he has done in this trial will never be done in Georgia again. I will stake my life on that."

"You may question Frank in his judgment; he might have hired a better lawyer than I. He might have hired a more discreet lawyer, but he couldn't have hired a more devoted lawyer. I will say that for myself if I drop dead in my tracks."

He spoke without heat in the introduction of his speech. He said that but for his profound conviction that his client was innocent he would not speak at all because the evidence spoke for itself.

Rosser will be followed by Solicitor Dorsey, who may finish before evening. It seemed probable, however, that the final arguments would take up the entire day and the judge make his charge to-morrow morning.

"Gentlemen of the jury," he began in a slow voice, as he leaned against the railing of the jury box, "all things come to an end. With the end of this case it was almost the end of the trial. But for that masterly effort of my friend Arnold I almost wish it had ended without my speaking."

His physical condition calmed me to say but little. My voice is husky and almost useless. But for my intense interest, my profound conviction of the innocence of this man, I would say nothing.

"I came to Atlanta to marry Miss Marie Byrd," Hogan declared, "and when I got here I did not remember her address. I haven't seen her in some time, but I'd know her in a minute. I was standing there waiting to see if she wouldn't pass."

Hogan inhaled as he was locked up five days ago instead of yesterday.

"The actor's arrest was the climax of a number of sensational incidents. He had been arrested at a woman passing Five Points for more than an hour, citizens who noticed him told Detective Harger, and the officer, watched Hogan, who went into a soda fountain and asked the soda clerk for the loan of a nickel. The clerk said he didn't have a nickel. Hogan graced at him sadly."

"Don't follow," he said, "if you have any money. I'll give you some, but no cents from my pocket and throw it on the counter. That was the result of a five alarm turned in by the Navy Yard."

Mrs. Irwin, with others of the household, jumped out of bed at a false alarm. Mrs. Irwin returned to her room. Her mother then turned her head from apoplectic.

When questioned about a letter he took up after the tragedy, which revealed his relations with his sister, Irwin for three years. Edmund said he had caught it from the book.

RHBROOKE QUEBEC, Aug. 21. Upon the return from Ottawa to-day of W. J. Shurtleff, one of the leading exponents of Harry K. T. It was strongly intimated that the habeas corpus proceedings would be dropped and the question of proving Thaw an insane and undecidable alien would be put squarely up to the Dominion Government.

A plea likely will be sent to the Governor General, the Duke of Connaught, asking him to intercede and begins to appear that Thaw will be sent back to New York.

The case may be fought all the way to King George. Thaw has enough money to carry it on indefinitely.

Thaw was to-day in the St. Francis jail bombing various official circles in the United States demanding that they come to his relief in connection of a plot to liberate Thaw free thick and fast, but no foundation for them could be found.

As the result of rumors of a plot to take Thaw from jail the prisoner was isolated. Governor Laker ordered that no one but Thaw's accredited attorneys should visit him in the future.

Beginning at Austell last Monday and continuing at Douglasville, Tallapoosa, Heflin, Amnicola, Ashville and finally St. Clair, receptions and good roads celebrations were the rule without a single exception.

Leaving Anniston Wednesday morning the Ferguson party, including their delegates from Riverside and Ashville that Mr. Ferguson was given much enthusiasm manifested. The leading citizens of the project and declared they would not stop until the Ashville-Boringville route had been selected for the trans-continental highway.

Al Greenport the party crossed the river on a ferry and here encountered some rough roads for about two miles. Before reaching Ashville, however, the party found the roads in excellent condition.

Mr. Ferguson found such an excellent road from a point near Ashville that he believes it will be selected this route for the official trans-continental route, although the official route of the party is making a vigorous fight for their highway.

Throughout the trip Mr. Ferguson, assisted by Mrs. Ferguson, is making the closest sort of check on all the road conditions. This check will be collected when the tour has been completed and printed for the information of tourists.

Advances reports from Montgomery, which Mr. Ferguson will reach Saturday at noon, Mobile and New Orleans for the reception of the tourists. City officials and other prominent citizens in each city will meet the party in Alabama, probably will take part in the tour.

Mr. J. Ferguson, official Pathfinder for the all-Southern trans-continental highway, left Birmingham Friday morning on the second leg of the long auto-trip from Atlanta to San Francisco. The party will reach Montgomery Saturday at noon, remain over there Sunday and set out for Mobile Monday. From Mobile the tourists will go to New Orleans, and then in the order named Houston, Dallas, Paso, Phoenix, San Diego, Los Angeles and San Francisco.

Ferguson and party reached Birmingham shortly after noon Thursday. Here a monster ovation was tendered to the trans-continental highway by a big delegation of good roads and county officials, representatives of the Chamber of Commerce and other civic organizations, as well as prominent officials of the Alabama Good Roads Association.

According to reports from the Magic City, the reception to the pathfinders seldom has been equalled there.

While the celebration in Birmingham and the "send off" in Atlanta last Monday were the biggest things on the program thus far, they in comparison were no less enthusiastic than the ovations accorded all along the route between the two Southern cities.

ASK'S 'HO' DID FRANK KNOW GIRL WOULD COME FOR HER PAY? No Way for Him to Know She Would Call on Holiday, Rosser Asserts

DETECTIVES ARE SCORED AS 'ACTIVE GANG' BENT ON CONVICTING ACCUSED

Continued from Page 1. You put your hand on your pockets. If you wouldn't, you are braver man than I. The word 'chief' is written all over his face. My friend, I don't believe in. One is a reformed thief and the other is a reformed member of the street.

asked as to what Frank was doing in his office? He said: "I had such a peach my dear that I had no time to give attention to anyone else."

all of us have been free of passion's knife, but I do say that most of humanity suffers of the crime of the private. A gentleman went down some surroundings when committing such an act. He was a gentleman. A decent man ever stood on the stand and bragged about the 'peach' that he had. Why, even the beasts of the field hide it.

"Burns had it right when he said 'in that poem about 'be gentle with your brother man, be gentle with your sister woman' that ends with the line, 'The human to sleep beside.'"

"I am going to be fair with you, gentlemen. If I can, I am going to tell you the truth. I thought this case was to be tried by a Solicitor General. God save the mark. I've never seen such partizan feelings before."

down that old building, none by none. You may assert that those girls wouldn't have fled, but I tell you I have a higher conception of the Georgia working girl than to believe for one minute that she would have remained.

Coming of The Sunbeam

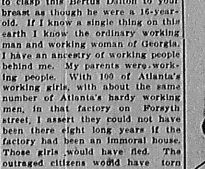

of his. I tell for him. I asked him if he had ever been long away from home. He evaded me. When he left the stand, I said, 'Rube, that man's been in the chair more or less as there's a God in heaven. And, sure enough, we looked him up, and he had been. Then he came to Atlanta, and they said he had reformed. But there are two things in this world I do not believe in. One is a reformed thief and the other is a reformed member of the street."

Left, Berpen's Trial. "This arm of the State is to protect the weak, yet I've heard something I've never heard before, and I never expect to hear as long as God lets me live. The Solicitor said, 'I'll go as far as the court will allow me. That's the crux of this whole case. When the Solicitor General said that, God only knows how far the detectives went. Dalton said he went to the factory some time last year, between the hours of 1 and 2 o'clock. Did he go into the Woodmen's Company's part of the building or into the pencil factory? There's nothing to show, except that wherever he went he left the trail of a serpent behind him. Frank didn't know he was there. It was Frank's lunch hour. If Dalton went, he was taking advantage of the factory authorities."

"What do you think would become of a factory superintendent who got on intimate terms with his women employees? This would be his case enough for a native born American, but what would you think full-blooded Americans would do or say about a foreigner who came here and attempted such a thing, and especially considering the antibody which has been born to the Jewish race?"

"Now, I have shown you that the factory has been prosperous, and we know well that the girls could not have been prosperous if immorality had been allowed to exist there. 'Now, let's take up the man. I don't have to tell you that he is smart. Every one of us knows that. When he got upon the stand and talked to you, he gave illustration of being one of the most remarkable men I have ever met. His talk to you was, indeed, remarkable, and as a last thing I mention to it for the first time, I wondered what marvelous talk he had made. I could never have made up a speech like that, even if I had had the brain. And it wasn't a written speech, either."

LEADING COUNSEL FOR FRANK IN FULL SWING

Luther Z. Rosser closes argument for defense.

Rosser turned toward Attorney Hooper at this point, and continued his testimony, to attack the characters of these young men, so that they may carry your case. You are willing to clap this Herbert Dalton to your breast as though he were a 16-year-old. If I knew a single thing on this earth I know the ordinary working man and working woman of Georgia. I have an assembly of working people behind me. My parents were working people. With 100 of Atlanta's working girls, with about the same number of Atlanta's hardy working men, in that factory on Poydris street, I assert they could not have been there eight long years if the factory had been an immoral house. Those girls would have fled. The outraged citizens would have torn every man connected with the bank has been under suspicion at one time or the other. But there is one thing I wish to say. There was never a hard-working, lively man among you who was ever found guilty in the slightest way.

Rosser's case has taxed even his remarkable physique. He has lost 25 pounds in weight.

"So it is with human life. It is this way with the hard-working man who follows the straight course and goes on in a majestic flow, in the evenness of his life. It is not for the jury, trying him, to take the spy-glass and search out the small eddies in his character, but let them take the full character, the broad and majestic flow of it. 'Why I had said a word about his character, the court would have instructed you to assume a good character. Under the law, each character would have been good to you. But we didn't wish to do that. We wanted you to know what manner of man he was. I say to you with all the sincerity of my soul that no man within the sound of my voice could show a good character as he has, if put to such a test. I am not dealing with the infamous lies of Dalton and Conley.

Easy to Find Witnesses Against a Character. "I couldn't fool you if I tried. Let's see who they are who may be as hard character. You know you can find some people to swear against anyone. Suppose my friend Arnold had occasion and so far forgot himself as to put my character up. Don't you suppose you could find a hundred men in Atlanta to swear that I am vitally vicious? I am not not extraordinarily so, but in my long practice of law, perhaps I have wronged someone. Perhaps sometimes in my zeal I have been too severe, and some people may think they have a just grievance against me."

"Now, what did this young man do? Here are the young ladies, and I have a word to say against them. The older I get, the greater I become. If anything, Oh, why should I abuse and vilify anyone? With our lives a moment bright, then dark forever, why should I?"

Scores Detectives as 'Active Gang'. "Why, I could find more people to swear against the Bishop of Atlanta. They have searched every corner. They have searched every nook. Barnes and Black and Campbell and Rosser, generated by that mighty detective, Chief Lanford."

parrot, Gant would have been the first man to testify to it. 'I had intended not to go into the detail, but if you will bear with me for a while I will. My friend Hooper said he had fairly presented the State's case. If he has they have not a case and it he has not he has been fair to you.

Says Boy Was Whipped By Dorsey. "My friend Frank had been preparing for this for several weeks. That little fellow says he saw Frank talking to the little girl and calling her Mary, and this Gant said Frank told him he seemed to know Mary Phagan very well. Gant did not tell that before the jury's request and that other young fellow had to be whipped and led by my friend Dorsey, only to get whipped up and prove that he knew nothing."

"That was what was next? The next was a little boy named Turner, not here to say anything against Turner, but look at the detectives with their claws above him. Remember what they did at Minoia McKnight, and then you will realize what happened to the boy."

Gant Knows Nothing Wrong About Frank. "My friend from the wiregrass (meaning Hooper) said that he was the beginning of his diabolical scheme. Then Gant was turned on as a part of the plot. Gant being the only one who knew of Frank's intentions toward the girl. 'Don't you suppose that if this plot had existed, Gant would have been the one in clear tones would have proclaimed it from the witness stand? Yet they had this long-legged fellow twice on the stand, and both times he said he knew nothing wrong about Frank."

"Conley says that Frank told him at 1 o'clock Friday afternoon to come back Saturday. Now, gentlemen, do you believe that? Don't you know that Frank had just returned from there Saturday? Phagan had been posted all around the factory, telling those who they were. Scarf had paid off, and had put the envelopes up. Frank had not even seen them. Now, little Helen Ferguson said she went to the office Friday afternoon and got her envelope, and that she asked them to give her Mary Phagan's. She said Frank declined to give it to her, and that when he did this she turned and walked away. 'Now, we have Magnolia Kennedy, who says she was right there with the little Ferguson girl, and that she

HOOPER AND ARNOLD IN ARGUMENT MADE MOST OF THEIR OPPORTUNITIES

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

Frank Hooper's speech in behalf of the prosecution against Leo Frank, charged with the murder of little Mary Phagan, reflected much credit upon him. It was fair, to the point, well thought out and appealing in tone and delivery. It went for the defendant, hammer and tongs, but it was devoid of anything that might be construed as below the belt. Undoubtedly, it was not pleasant to the defendant, sitting there, solemnly following the words of Hooper—but Dorsay and Hooper, in their final aspect, have made a most dangerous case against Frank, and Hooper was there to explain and sustain it. He performed his duty in a way that has fallen to bring him lasting applause and commendation. If, however, Frank felt to the full the force of the case made out against him by Hooper, he was more than abundantly taken care of when Arnold followed. The case made out in defense of Frank by Arnold was extremely plausible—it covered in detail every point developed by Hooper. If like Hooper, was a speech evidently carefully considered. Jury Held in High Esteem. Now, the thing to consider, these two speeches that made them particularly and uniquely noteworthy, perhaps, is that both were seemingly designed for the consideration of a jury held to be highly intelligent and not apt to rush pell-mell to a verdict either for or against Frank. And if the opposing counsel entertain that opinion of the jury—if they hold in such compelling esteem and respect—and if the jury is such a jury as deserves that opinion, why is it that the chances are that that verdict will be righteous and just, whatever it may be. Will the jury believe that it is hard that the finding of this jury SHALL speak the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth—that, in the words of Hamlet, "a consummation most devoutly to be wished?" Try this case, gentlemen, accord Frank Hooper, addressing the jury Thursday. That is the final and the ultimate request any man for or against the defendant could or should make of the twelve good men and true; there to pass upon the fate of Leo Frank. Neither the State nor the defense, in justice and right, dare plead for more or less. The two opposing speeches in murder trials are presumed to outline clearly the trend of the completed arguments both ways. Concluding attorneys may amplify and enlarge upon points raised by opening attorneys, but they may not add beyond the primary outlining of the two main points of view. And so, while Hooper and Arnold may go further than Hooper and Arnold in invective, sarcasm, ridicule and passionate outbreak, neither is to add anything material to either side, as compared with the things Hooper and Arnold have said. There is some advantage to the State—or, at least, there is supposed to be some advantage to it—in that it has the concluding argument before the jury. No injustice there. Some people think this is an injustice and a hardship upon the defense, but when one comes to consider the theory upon which that practice is founded the apparent injustice and hardship of it vanishes, and it may be seen readily enough that it is, in so many things the law has

JURY think, and what will the jury say? No one of us has the opportunity to know so well the ins and outs of the case as the jury. The jury does not read what I write, nor does it hear what you say. It is there, in the courtroom, made from the outside world, off to itself, a thing apart—there to do justice, to the State and to Frank, though the heavens be veridical! There is no responsibility upon individuals expressing opinion pro and con. They are not under oath—the life of a human being, on the one hand, and the majesty of the law of the land on the other, are no direct legal concerns of theirs. It is all very well for you to say that the general public should now prepare itself to receive the verdict as the final and determining circumstance in the case. Individual opinion is interesting at times, but after all, a man's opinion is as good as another's, but not more so. What you think, readers, and what I think, is relatively inconsequential in the thing that matters SUPREMACY, now, and the thing that alone matters supremely, is what does the

"Governor Slaton" was perched, and justly so, for a hurrying traveling man had stepped on his tail. He arched his back, dug his claws into the sort rugs at the Hotel Ansley and snarled venomfully. He loved nobody and nobody loved him. Then Miss Gladys Brinkley came along. Miss Gladys is one of the prettiest of the young women who work at the Ansley. Diners unite in saying that the smile she dispenses as she hands out the hats at the door of the rathskeller are worth more than the dinner. It was one of those whose-souled, joyful smiles that Miss Brinkley bestowed on the disconsolate "Governor." The "Governor" succumbed to the witchery of the smile and knew right away that he had found a friend. So he stretched his claws, dropped his back, and leaped straight into Miss Brinkley's arms, where he purred contentedly while she stroked him behind the ears and crooned over him. For "Governor Slaton" isn't what you might think he is at all. He's a cat. And the "Governor" is quite a remarkable cat, too. To begin with, he is snow white; not a blotch of color mars his sleek beauty. He is absolutely alone in the world, having no brothers and sisters, and his mother deserted him when he was quite young. He is further distinguished by the fact that he probably is the only cat in captivity born in a big hotel. For the "Governor" first saw the light of day in a vacant room on the thirteenth floor of Atlanta's newest hotel. "Governor Slaton" does not care much for human companionship—except Miss Brinkley—but once in a while he will allow Mrs. Morgan, who keeps a shop on the mezzanine floor, to pat him. He has no use for men, unless they come bearing gifts, which he accepts and then sticks a claw into the hand of the giver. He is happy about six hours a day. That is when Miss Brinkley is on duty and he can snuggle up at her feet or purr luxuriously in her lap. And Miss Brinkley likes the "Governor" too. "All cats are nice," she said, "but I just adore our "Governor" because he is so well behaved, and never tries to scratch me. He always hunts me up when I go to work, and will sit with me for hours at a time. The "Governor" has been my friend ever since I first saw him, the day the traveling man stepped on his foot. I felt so sorry for him I couldn't keep from cuddling him." The hotel attaches tell a rather remarkable tale about the coming of the cat, which shows why he was named "Governor Slaton." It seems that when the rugs came to the thirteenth floor, a big white cat jumped out when they unrolled one. Kitty ran down the hall, and no attention was paid to her. Two weeks later the hotel opened, and Governor John M. Slaton was the first man to register. The same night one of the hotel employees found a little white cat on the thirteenth floor crying its little heart out for something to eat. By consulting a few clocks and watches, it was learned that the cat had been born at the exact moment Governor Slaton was inscribing his name on the hotel register—hence the name. The Danger of Imitations.

An Ohio druggist writes to "The Practical Druggist," a prominent New York Drug Journal, as follows: "Please furnish formula for Castoria. All the formulas I have worked with are either ineffective or disagreeable to administer." To this "The Practical Druggist" replies: "We do not supply formulas for proprietary articles. We couldn't if we wanted to. His experience with imitative formulas is not surprising, but just what is to be expected. When Castoria is wanted, why not supply the genuine. If you make a substitute, it is not fair or right to label it Castoria. We can give you all sorts of laxative preparations for Children, but not Castoria, and we think a mother who asks for Castoria would not feel kindly toward you if you gave her your own product under such a name." Senate Resolution Asks for Constabularies to Protect Foreigners in Turbulent Republic.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 21.—Senator Penrose to-day introduced a resolution in the Senate declaring it to be the sense of that body that the President of the United States should establish constabularies in Mexico and place in them a sufficient number of troops to protect the lives and property of American citizens.

The resolution also declares it to be the sense of the Senate that it has been the policy of the United States to maintain the Monroe Doctrine.

That there is internal lawlessness and warfare in Mexico; that the continuation of this condition will add to the complications there.

That the first duty of the United States is to protect the lives and property of its citizens at home and abroad.

Sulzer and Glynn Imbroglio Has Echo in Georgia Capitol

That the Sulzer-Glynn gubernatorial mix-up in New York City has a far-reaching effect was indicated at the Georgia Capitol Thursday when the Governor found his hands tied in connection with efforts to have Homer Reed extradited from New York.

In the meantime the matter was held up just long enough for the Sulzer-Glynn imbroglio to interfere. The upshot of the whole matter now is that Mr. Sulzer, the Governor of New York, according to the ruling of the Attorney General of that State, has the extradition papers for Reed in his pocket.

LINK BY LINK, FRANK DEFENDER HEWS AWAY AT STATE'S THEORIES

In a cold, cutting arraignment of the methods used to build up a case against Leo M. Frank, accused of the murder of Mary Phagan, Reuben Arnold, of the accused man's defense, Thursday afternoon unsparingly flayed Jim Conley as a perjurer and willing tool in the hands of men determined to convict an innocent man.

Arnold charged that the state had deliberately perverted every innocent action into a crime, accusation pointing to guilt. Link by link, he hewed away at the prosecution's chain.

He ridiculed the theory of a premeditated attack, declaring that none but God could have known that Mary Phagan was to call for her pay on Saturday—a holiday. He said the State's attempt to prove premeditation was but an instance of its many "wild guesses."

Arnold was only well started on all the circumstances preceding and following the crime as such a court opened in the afternoon. Through all the day Frank's mother and wife sat by him. The younger Mrs. Frank sat much of the time with her arm linked with that of her husband.

After Hooper had finished his argument he began presenting authorities to the judge to guide him in making his charge to the jury. He declared that the jury should not be charged that direct evidence was superior to circumstantial evidence.

"I am certain that I will be acquitted and set right before the world," he said. "It had been a terrible ordeal, but I await the outcome with the utmost confidence."

and found something. They found the body of little Mary Phagan cruelly murdered, the cold body lying on the ground where it had been left, for Jim Conley to burn.

"Jim had taken his nap, though, and had not come back. The policemen took the body to the undertaking establishment, and at daylight they started to get up Frank again. And when they got him he was anxious to know if there had been a fire.

"And, gentlemen, aside from conversation that took place, every officer and every man who was with him that morning will tell you that he was nervous; that he was shaking like a leaf; that he rubbed his hands and was completely filled with nervousness.

"But, gentlemen, he is a wonderful man. Though he stood there and quivered that Sunday morning, a man you can say that during this trial you have seen him ever since. He is as calm and cool as any man in the courthouse, to all intents and purposes.

"But the morning after the crime he was as weak as a cat. He was nervous; he was trembling like a leaf. The people in the automobile on the way to the undertaking establishment felt him tremble. Hold up Time Slip to Jury.

"What was his conduct when he got down there to the morgue? He did not look on his victim, on whom he had had lustful eyes for weeks. He fled; he could not pay the proper respect to a dead body. He went behind a curtain, a place where he had no business to go. He rushed out and waited for the rest.

"Did he identify her? No; he said he thought it was the girl he had put off the day before. He had to go back to the records; he had to look up and see what her name was. Still, he had seen her every day as he passed the machine where she worked. It was the same girl he called Mary; it was the same girl he called in conversation; it was the same girl on whose shoulder he placed his hand.

"What did he do with the time slip that was put in the night before? He said, after looking at it, that it was properly prepared. Others looked over his shoulder and agreed to it. He truly himself agreed to it.

"At this point Attorney Hooper produced the time slip which he held up before the jury.

"There weren't any marks on it, then," he continued.

horries on the question of a reasonable doubt and the quality of circumstantial evidence. And it is against the law to charge a jury that circumstantial evidence is not sufficient to direct.

"Clipping other authorities, Hooper said: 'If the facts of the case point unerringly to the guilt of the defendant, then to all intents and purposes the proof of guilt is certain as though the evidence was direct.'

"The proof of a good character," Hooper continued, "will neither convince the jury of the evidence against the defendant, nor will it overcome the proof of good character if it is not backed, as it was in this case, by the evidence presented.

"It is unfair for a jury to be charged that direct evidence is superior to circumstantial evidence. And it is against the law to charge a jury that circumstantial evidence is not sufficient to direct.

Arnold Opens Argument Charging Persecution

When Attorney Arnold arose to speak he asked for the paper model of the penalty factor. The model was brought in and placed before the jury stand.

"Gentlemen of the jury," Arnold began, "we are to be congratulated that this case is drawing to a close. We have all suffered at trying a case requiring so much effort, time and concentration as such hot weather. We have suffered for lack of adequate quarters and from the noise from the street.

"A man's physical surroundings has a good deal to do with how he can do work. I never could do good work when I was uncomfortable. And it

CONLEY'S GREAT DEEDS ARE KEPT CLOSE

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

The evidence in the Frank case all has been delivered; the last word will be spoken, both for and against the defendant, so far as the witnesses are concerned.

It only remains for the lawyers to argue the matter to the jury—and then, after the court has given the jury the law in charge, they will remain only the verdict to record.

The most complex, difficult, elusive and mysterious murder case in the entire criminal history of Georgia is being tried in this courtroom.

It is doubtful whether any of us ever shall see the like of the Frank trial again.

Lawyers give it as their opinion that it has been, in a dozen or more ways, the most extraordinary proceeding ever coming under their observation—and certainly the newsworthy of the State never have been called upon to handle a story so amazingly strange in its varied and sometimes astonishing ramifications.

The Phagan case—as such it will go down in history, rather than as the Frank case—has combined within itself all that goes to make for intense and insistent human interest.

It has revolved about a sweet little working girl, tragically and cruelly and brutally killed—murdered in the first flush of youth and promising womanhood, who probably never knew, and if knowing, still not comprehending, why that awful fate should have come upon her so suddenly and so unavowably.

It has involved the honor and the home happiness of a young business man, therefore of unblemished integrity and standing in one of the most cultured cities in the world; it has gradually unfolded within itself the life of two mothers, and it has made to bleed the hearts of all who have known or loved the girl, the mind of hundreds of loving friends both near and far.

It has, with scathing emphasis, suppressed but unmistakable, the most direct and unimpaired and unopinionated—gathered all it swept along—has been taken to the real point in issue, until the one big stake the world must set, the presently, at times, been completely lost sight of, and even now is not easy to find with certainty.

The Phagan case has run the entire scale of human emotions—their deepest and their noblest, and their appeal that has not been, somehow or another, neglected in any of its phases.

Frank has had to answer not to the charge of murder, but to the indictment contemplated he should—

The one means an ignoble death if he is found guilty of the crime of murder. The other means a life in prison, and yet one can hardly measure the difference between the two. In that the second charge got into the record with the consent of the defense, if not almost by its inclination.

Scales Held With Even Hand. Judge Hooper and in this, at least, I think the public is agreed, has held the scales level, to look the balance even. If there be error in his rulings, they have been errors of the head and not of the heart. I take it that any error of his has been maintained an impartial average of judicial factors.

What effect upon the jury the evidence will have is highly speculative and no one can say. The evidence was not composed of human beings and could confine itself to those things which have been legally held to be the pathway to acquittal or conviction.

was a little boy named Frank. I am here to say anything against your father. I don't know what was in the head of old John Black, God Almighty only knows. That's one reason I love John so. I can't tell you his heart.

Then on Monday the police did what they did. I know what was in the head of old John Black, God Almighty only knows. That's one reason I love John so. I can't tell you his heart.

My friend from the wiregrass (meaning Frank) said that the defendant had a diabolical scheme. He said that he had been a part of the plan. He said that he had been a part of the plan.

Don't you suppose that if this plot had existed, it would have been the one who in relation to the wiregrass had been a part of the plan.

Conley says that Frank told him at a dock on Friday morning that he was going to get out of there. He said that he was going to get out of there.

How did Frank know that Mary Phagan would come to the factory at all on Saturday. He said that he had been a part of the plan.

Luther Rosser's Tribute to the Jury

"We walk the streets carelessly, absorbed in our own interests. We pass our friends, and do not recognize them. The mind wanders in flights of fancy and fits of revelry. We mean no harm to ourselves nor harm to our friends, but we are careless.

"Others may take the brave talk of standing up for the weak and oppressed, but it is not for you. You are a still, silent, concentered band. You are to do your duty without one thought of the past or the future. You are here and now concentered by justice to do your duty."

Justified that crime and not have scars upon him. Frank showed them that he had no marks upon himself.

"No wonder Frank jumped at being Gant. He actually did jump when Gant put him on the top of the factory and the crowd made him jump out of the window."

"A Courageous Deed." "Some good man will hire him again. I don't know what the point is about that. I will let it go."

"Not Arrested, Had To Be Released." "The man Haas is not of my age. He called me up. If there is any man in the world who is not of my age, it is that man."

"More Devoted Lawyer." "Dorsey's eyes got so green as he looked at the man. He said that he was nervous. He said that he was nervous."

"Moved By Child's Death." "Men in a crowd. He is hard-headed. They say he is a little below the average. He has a high opinion of himself."

"No Chances for Him To Commit Crime." "There is no other suspicion. They say he is a man. They say he is a man. They say he is a man."

"Treated New Evidence." "If I had his endurance, I would take away. It will be a shame to let any man go who has been convicted of a crime."

HOOPER AND ARNOLD IN ARGUMENT MADE MOST OF THEIR OPPORTUNITIES

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

Frank Hooper's speech in behalf of the prosecution against Leo Frank charged with the murder of little Mary Phagan, reflected much truth upon him.

It is fair, to the point, well thought out and appealing in tone and delivery.

Now, the thing about these two speeches that made them particularly and uniquely noteworthy, perhaps, is that both were seemingly directed for the consideration of a jury to be highly intelligent and not to rush pell-mell to a verdict either for or against Frank.

And that the finding of this jury will speak the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth—that in the words of Hamlet, "is a consummation most devoutly to be wished."

Try this case, gentlemen, according to the law and the facts, and you will find that the State is right.

No injustice there. Some people think this is an injustice, but when one comes to consider the theory upon which that practice is founded the apparent injustice and hardship of it vanishes, and it may be seen readily enough that in this as in so many things the law has been most carefully thought out—and is just and right.

The law, however, in the event the defendant elects to introduce no witnesses in his behalf, and to rely solely upon his own isolated statement, reserves the right to require the order of argument and permits the defense to open and close—for the law will not permit a defendant to place himself at a disadvantage without fully compensating him for the same.

It is the right of the State to have the benefit of a full and complete hearing upon the facts of the case, and to have the right to present its case in its own way.

What more can human ingenuity do to introduce the facts of a case like the one now on trial, than has been provided in the present hearing?

WASHINGTON, Aug. 22.—Despite the efforts of Postmaster Hugh H. McKeen of Atlanta to postpone his removal by the Postoffice Department, and his assertions that he will fight the request for his immediate resignation, no extension of time will be allowed him.

The department has read Mr. McKeen's statement, in which he denies any knowledge of the efforts of his friends to have the charges withdrawn. He states emphatically that he does not want them withdrawn, and that he will not resign his office until he knows the nature of the charges.

Commissioner Price Spends Night in Dead Auto on Lonely Road

All alone in a "dead" automobile on a dark night on a lonely road between Atlanta and Stone Mountain was the commissioner of agriculture, J. C. Price, of the State Department of Agriculture.

The commissioner and his son were motoring from Walton to Atlanta, everything went well until the Georgia Railroad crossing a few miles from Stone Mountain was reached.

There is a dangerous crossing as a result of new grading, and to add to the difficulty Mr. Price's machine suddenly went "dead" and "dead" it remained until nearly midnight.

Frank Hooper's speech in behalf of the prosecution against Leo Frank charged with the murder of little Mary Phagan, reflected much credit upon him.

It was far to the point, well thought out and appealing in tone and delivery. It was for the defendant, hammer and tongs, but it was devoid of anything that might be construed as being the bait.

Undoubtedly, it was not pleasant to the defendant, sitting there, hollidly following the words of Hooper, but Dorsey and Hooper, in its final aspect, have made out a most dangerous case against Frank and Hooper was there to explain and sustain it.

It is, however, Frank felt to the full the gloom of the case made out against him by Hooper, he was more than abundantly taken care of when Arnold followed.

And if the opponent could entertain that opinion of the jury—by which it holds in this compelling case, respect and if the jury in such a jury as deserves that opinion, which I think it is, then the chance as regards the verdict will be a serious and just, whatever it may be.

And that the finding of this jury will speak the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth—that, in the words of Hamlet, "the summation most devoutly to be wished."

Try this case, gentlemen, according to the law and the facts. Let Frank Hooper, addressing the jury Thursday.

That is the final and the ultimate request any man or any woman or any child could make of the twelve good men and true, to pass upon the fate of Leo Frank.

Neither the State nor the defense, in justice and right, dare will plead for more or less.

The two opening speeches in murder trials are pronounced to be the most important and the most significant arguments both ways.

Concluding attorney may amplify and elaborate upon points raised by opening attorney, but they rarely say far beyond the primary outlines of the two main points of view.

And so, while Hooper and Dorsey may go further than Hooper and Dorsey in invective, sarcasm, ridicule and passionate attack, neither is permitted to do anything material to the side, as compared with the things Hooper and Arnold have said.

There is some advantage to the State—or, at least, there is supposed to be some advantage to it—in that it has the concluding argument before the jury.

No justice there. Some people think this is an injustice and a hardship upon the defense, but when one comes to consider the theory upon which that practice is founded, the apparent injustice and hardship of it vanishes, and it may be seen readily enough that in this, in so many things, the law has been most carefully thought out—and is just and right.

The law throws about the defendant at bar the presumption of innocence—places upon the State the burden of proving him guilty, rather than putting upon the defendant the burden of proving himself innocent.

But the law, having done this, permits the final voice to be the voice from the grave.

The dead—be it she—is not there to speak, and to say as to the truth, but the law directs that the prosecuting counsel shall speak if it instead.

Thus does the law, with impartial hand, protect first the defendant and then protect quite as jealously its mastery, and the rights of the dead.

The law, however, in the event the defendant elects to introduce evidence in his behalf, and to rely solely upon his own isolated statement, or under oath, reverses the order of argument and permits the defense to open and close—the law will not permit a defendant to introduce evidence in his behalf at a disadvantage without fully compensating him for the same.

What will the Frank jury say? Will it find the prisoner not guilty, clear his name of all stain and send him forth a free man? Or will it find him guilty and send upon him forever the disgrace of one of the most heinous and diabolical crimes ever committed in Georgia? To render the latter verdict it must believe Frank a monster.

"Governor Slaton" was peevish, and justly so, for a hurrying traveling man who has about concluded that he does not read what I write nor does it hear what you say. Miss Brinkley is one of the prettiest of the young women who work at the Ansley. Conley Arranging For 'Disremembering'

And it was like this with the negro. He had been well trained in the past. As long as he was repeating his story of the disposition of the body he was better perfect. But when he was asked anything else and incidentally he was asked to remember anything else, I asked him about Della Hopkins. The first time he spoke of her he said he saw her on the first floor with Mr. Frank. She had her arm around his neck and then again at another place. 'I asked him questions of other things he would say I can't remember.' He could not remember anything of his story and remember every word. Conley remembers an assistance in connection with Queen Caroline of England. She was charged with treason, but no Britishman dared to swear against her. They searched the whole of it around and did not find a man of the Anglo-Saxon race would dare to speak the lies they sought to have spoken. Finally they found two of these Italians who swore against her. They learned their names when they had a letter perfect as the actor who attacked Macbeth from the particular subject. They would resort to the Italian League and declare they could not remember. They perjured themselves. And it was this way with the witness Jim Conley. He perjured himself.

'When I would ask Conley about anything else, he would say, "I don't know" or "Does, James." When I would ask him, "Who did you tell about it?" When I would ask him like questions, back would come his old answer, "Does, I don't remember." They say he could not have made up that kind of a story, but I think he could, and I think it did well in respect to his story.'

'Negro Was Lying To Save His Own Neck'

'But why shouldn't he? Think of the coaching he had. I think Jimmie Black, Starnes, the Chief of Detectives and the rest of them, that I do not could be better perjured in it. He had them to help him out. Let's start from the professor in the school of learning.

Who knows but that the 15th chapter of his statement is actually the last of a new story, one even Professor Starnes did not know about, the product of some other party.' PREJUDICE ISSUE BROUGHT IN BY DEFENSE ONLY, SAYS DORSEY IN FINAL SPEECH

Important affair of life. It was not as was said in the case of John way back in the days of the old Georgia that the possibility of its not being guilty was sufficient. It must be shown as a reasonable doubt in an honest investigation would entertain as to the fact.

"That authority is from the forty-seventh Georgia. It must not be the doubt that might be conjured up. It must not be such a doubt that one might claim to acquit a friend. It must not be a trivial doubt, a mere technicality. It must not be the doubt of a crank or an over-sensitive person.

Doubt, He Says.

The reasonable doubt must be one that cannot be acquitted every time. There must not be a doubt that there would be acquittal in all cases. There must be a doubt that is not a mere technicality, but a doubt that is based on evidence dependent on human morals is subject to some doubt. This doubt is incapable of precise definition. It is a comprehension of the meaning follows directly the words. There is no circumstantial evidence as good as direct evidence. That is not so according to these authorities. It is a positive fact that there is no place in a courtroom. And I am coming to Mr. Arnold's case in a minute.

If circumstantial evidence satisfies the mind, it is as good as positive evidence. The doctrine of reasonable doubt as shown by the defense, originated back yonder at the time when a man was not allowed a jury.

"As I progress with our improved methods, that idea will be dropped together. The State has got all kinds of burdens and obstacles to surmount. It never was better illustrated than in this case.

"Don't think this matter is a subtle, elusive something. When you get your ideas as a man, you have got them as a jury. You can get up any kind of an excuse for turning loose a man, but that must be outside of a jury box. You can not turn a man loose here on any light fantastic court. That would violate your oath, and I know you would do that.

Upholds Evidence

That Is Circumstantial.

In the Ninety-second Georgia, they speak of it that is, reasonable doubt does not mean a vague, conjectural, or a mere possibility. It is the duty of a jury to be a decision on the evidence in the case. It means a doubt which would cause a juror to abstain to proceed to a verdict on everyday business walk of life.

"It is a mere technicality. You are after gentlemen. The certainly brought to your mind is the reasonable doubt. You can get up any kind of an excuse for turning loose a man, but that must be outside of a jury box. You can not turn a man loose here on any light fantastic court. That would violate your oath, and I know you would do that.

afterward. The contention of the prosecution was that he murdered her in the church. Both were attendants of the church, and members of the Christian Endeavor Association. Dorsey had been to the side door of the church, and was familiar with the interior.

Likens Duran to Case to Frank's.

"A woman saw the defendant walking out of the downtown front of the church. He was very pale, his coat and his hat were off, there were scratches on his face, and he was holding a woman's hand. He was looking at her with a look of intense interest. He was looking at her with a look of intense interest. He was looking at her with a look of intense interest.

Actor, Arrested for Staring at Women, Says He Was Looking for His Sweetheart.

A wonderful tale of having come to Atlanta to get married and forgetting the address of his bride was told at police headquarters Friday by Edward Hogan, an actor from New Orleans, who was arrested at Five Points by Detective Harper last Thursday.

Harper arrested Hogan because, he says, the actor was staring rudely and offensively at women. Hogan insists he was looking for his sweetheart, hoping to see her in the passing.

"I came to Atlanta to marry Miss Marie Byrd," Hogan declared, "and when I got here I could not remember her address. I haven't seen her in some time, but I'd know her in a minute. I was standing there waiting for it when I was arrested."

Hogan insists also that he was looking for his sweetheart, hoping to see her in the passing. He was standing there waiting for it when he was arrested.

The actor's arrest was the climax of a number of sensational incidents at Five Points for more than an hour yesterday, which were watched by a large number of on-lookers.

He expects to make the trip by easy stages, arriving in the California metropolis in time for the opening of the Panama Exposition.

Seymour says he left Ferdinand, on the Florida coast, April 1. At the outset of his trip he intended only to walk to Atlanta, but having gotten a safe trip, he and his calf have decided to take the freak animal on the exposition and exhibit him.

"I am not trying to make a record for the trip across the continent," Seymour says, "I just want to see the world and to see the people. I have decided to take the freak animal on the exposition and exhibit him.

HOOPER AND ARNOLD ARGUMENT MADE MOST OF THEIR OPPORTUNITIES

By JAMES B. NEVIN. Frank Hooper's speech in behalf of the prosecution against Leo Frank charged with the murder of little Mary Phagan, reflected much credit upon him. It was fair to the point, well thought out and appealing in tone and delivery. It went for the Aristotelian hammer and anvil, but it was devoid of any belief that might be construed as below the belt. Undoubtedly, it was not pleasant to the defendant, hitting there, stolidly following the words of Hooper—but Dorey and Arnold, in their final speeches, have made out a most dangerous case against Frank, and Hooper was there to explain and sustain it. He performed his duty in a way that hardly can fall to bring him lasting applause and commendation. If, however, Frank fell to the full ground of the case—made out against him by Hooper, he was awarded a somewhat taken care of when Arnold followed. The case made out in defense of Frank by Arnold was extremely plausible—it covered in detail every point developed by Hooper. It was carefully considered. Jury held in High Estem. No one thing about these two speeches that made them particularly and uniquely noteworthy, perhaps, is that each was seemingly destined for the consideration of a jury held to be highly intelligent and not apt to rush pell-mell to a verdict either for or against Frank. And if the opposing counsel entertain that opinion of the jury—if they hold it in such compelling esteem and respect—and if the jury is such a jury as deserves that opinion, which I think it is, then the chances are that whichever will be righteous and just verdict may be. And that the finding of this jury shall speak the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the whole truth in the words of Hamlet, "as a consummation most devoutly to be wished." In this case, gentlemen, according to the law and the facts," said Frank Hooper, addressing the jury Thursday.

FELINE WAIF FINDS PROTECTOR IN PRETTY HOTEL ANSLEY MISS

This is Miss Gladys Brinkley and "Governor Slaton" in a special pose for camera man.

"Governor" is never quite happy unless he is safe in the arms of his fair guardian. No one can step on his tail then—he's sure of that.

M'KEE NOT TO GET TIME EXTENSION

Name of Bolling H. Jones as Successor to Go to Senate Within Few Days. WASHINGTON, Aug. 22.—Despite the efforts of Postmaster Hugh L. McKee of Atlanta to postpone his removal by the Postoffice Department, and his assertions that he will fight the request for his immediate resignation, no extension of time will be allowed him. It will be summarily removed. It was said here today, within a few days, and the name of Bolling H. Jones will be sent in as his successor within the next two or three days. The department has read Mr. McKee's statement, in which he denies any knowledge of the efforts of his friends to have the charges withdrawn. He states emphatically that he does not want them withdrawn, and that he will not resign his office until he knows the nature of the charges. Mr. McKee and his friends say that had his resignation been requested on the grounds that the Administration wished to appoint a Democrat, he would have complied at once, but in view of the charges, he thinks it best to remain at his post until they are proved or disproved. So far the department has received no answer to its letter to Mr. McKee, dated August 14, asking for his immediate resignation. Having allowed him plenty of time to submit it, the department proposes to go ahead with the appointment of his successor without delay.

Commissioner Price Spends Night in Dead Auto on Lonely Road

All alone in a "dead" automobile on a dark night on a lonely road between Atlanta and Stone Mountain was the experience of Commissioner J. D. Price, of the State Department of Agriculture. Although Mr. Price admitted it's a good one on him, he doesn't make any secret of it, and now that the harrowing experience is a thing of the past, he actually chuckles when he speaks of it. The Commissioner and his son were motoring from Walton to Atlanta. Everything went well until the Georgian Railroad crossing a few miles from Stone Mountain was reached. There is a dangerous crossing as a result of new grading, and to add to the difficulty Mr. Price's machine suddenly went "dead," and "dead" it remained until nearly midnight. Mr. Price remained in the car while his son walked four miles to the nearest house for assistance.

BOY KIDNAPED 17 YEARS AGO FOUND

New York Mystery Cleared When History of Trappist Monks' Ward Is Traced. LACHINE, QUE., Aug. 22.—After being kidnaped by gypsies and escaping, then being taken up and cared for by Canadian monks, Frederick Brossseau, of Potsdam, N. Y., has been found. Brossseau was kidnaped seventeen years ago when he was seven years old. After escaping he was given a home by Trappist monks near Oka. The monks raised him. They gypies made several ineffectual attempts to get the boy away. Chief Clerk of Lachine to-day applied to the provincial authorities to send him after certain gypsy leaders in the North and bring them here or to Montreal for trial. The Rev. Father Myron, of Oka, heard while visiting the monastery of the Trappist fathers at Lachine, Quebec, the strange story of the man, and remembering the disappearance of Brossseau at Potsdam, questioned him. Brossseau's parents went to Oka and identified their son by a birth mark. In the meantime news of the young man's strange capture got abroad in the newspapers and many persons claimed him as their son.

Chatham Tax Rate $83 on Thousand

SAVANNAH, Aug. 22.—Chatham County's rate for 1913 has been fixed at $83 on $1,000, which is the same rate levied for last year. It was found to be impracticable to make any downward revision of the rate, despite the rather substantial increase in tax returns, for the fact that the increase in revenues will be only about $2,000. The Commissioners allow 10 per cent interest on the tax.

"Governor Slaton" Is One of the Most Distinguished Young Cats in Atlanta.

"Governor Slaton" was peevish, and justly so, for a hurrying traveling man had stepped on his tail. He arched his back, dug his claws into the soft rug at the Hotel Ansley and snarled vengefully. He loved nobody and nobody loved him. Then Miss Gladys Brinkley came along. Miss Brinkley is one of the prettiest of the young women who work at the Ansley. These unlike in saying that the cat she dislikes as she hands out the hats at the door of the rattleshaker are worth more than the dinner. It was one of those whole-souled, joyful antics the Miss Brinkley bestowed on the disconsolate "Governor." The "Governor" succumbed to the witchery of the smile and knew right away that he had found a friend. So he established his claws, stropped his back, and leaped straight into Miss Brinkley's arms, where he hurred contentedly while she stroked him behind the ears and crooned over him. For "Governor Slaton" lent what you might think he is at all. He's a cat! And the "Governor" is quite a remarkable cat, too. He begins with his snow white, not a blotch of color, but his sleek beauty. He is absolutely alone in the world, having no brothers and sisters, and his mother deserted him when he was quite young. He is further distinguished by the fact that he probably is the only cat in captivity born in a big city. For the "Governor" first saw the light of day in a vacant room of the thirty-fourth floor of Atlanta's newest history. "Governor Slaton" does not care much for human companionship—except Miss Brinkley—but once in a while he will allow Mrs. Morgan, who keeps a shop on the mezzanine floor, to pat him. He has no use for men, unless they come bearing gifts, which he accepts and then sticks a claw into the hand of the giver. He is happy about six hours a day. That is when Miss Brinkley is on duty and he can snuggle up at her feet or purr luxuriously in her lap. And Miss Brinkley likes the "Governor," too. "All cats are nice," she said, "but I just don't see 'Governor' He is so well behaved, and never tries to scratch me. He always hints me up when I go to work, and will sit with me for hours at a time. The "Governor" has been my friend ever since I first saw him, the day the traveling man stepped on his foot. I fell so sorry for him I couldn't keep from cuddling him."

Senator Borah, Cut By Bottle, Swoons

WASHINGTON, Aug. 22.—When Senator Borah attempted to use the cork out of a mineral water bottle in the Republican cloak room of the Senate, the neck broke and the palm of the Senator's hand was badly cut. The blood flowed so freely and the cut was so painful that the Senator swooned. A doctor was summoned and it was found necessary to take three or four stitches in the wound.

Negro Is Executed in Savannah Jail

SAVANNAH, Aug. 22.—Frank Collier, a negro, was hanged in the Chatham County Jail today for the murder on April 1912 of Morrie Robinson, a negro. Collier previously retained a conviction, for the murder of a white woman, in Georgia. To render the latter verdict it must be believed Frank a monster, lost to every sense of decency and right—a man who has meanly and unprovokedly received his mother's wife, his friends, his faithful employees and his acquaintances. It must believe him a cruel murderer, for an unrepentant murderer—the fiercest and most evil creature ever known among his kindred and his kind!

MAJORITY WOMEN FLOCK TO COURT TO HEAR CLOSE OF FRANK ARGUMENTS

You would get word. But get him on something else and he is lost. You can train a dog to do tricks; you can train a horse to count, but all the dog or horse to count more things else than that in which he is trained, and he is completely lost.

Conley Arraigned For "Disremembering" "And it was like this with this negro. He had been well trained in that. As long as he was reciting his story of the disposition of the body he was better perfect. But just when he was reciting the name of Daisy he was told to remember anything else. I asked him about Daisy Hopkins. The first time he spoke of Daisy he said he saw her on the first floor with Mr. Frank. Then he had her somewhere else, and then again at another place.

When I would ask Conley about anything else, he would say, "I don't know, or I don't remember." When I would ask him, "Who did you see in the courtroom?" he would say, "I don't know, or I don't remember."

How the Witness Arranged His Dates. "When it comes to fixing a new, some story like that told by Jim Conley, there is not a white man in my hearing who is the equal of the negro. Let's see the story he told: He said that he had been called to the witness stand by the coroner and that he had been told to recite his story to save his own neck.

Colonel Hooper and I used to trail the coroner, Scott O'Brien. He told me Hooper and I used to trail the coroner, Scott O'Brien. He told me Hooper and I used to trail the coroner, Scott O'Brien.

"They didn't put him back as they started to say were afraid he would give a new revelation of the whole affair. I am nearly through, but before I conclude I want to direct your attention to one fact. Put away all I have said. Forget it all. I would not blame you if you did not know what I have said.

"You can very easily see how they would do it. I should have to get the lies and showed him where they could not be true. They took him where they were wrong and where they would be right. They took him where they were right and where they would be wrong. They took him where they were right and where they would be wrong.
